

Midnight Library

By Matt Haig

Nora Seed is deeply unhappy with her life and decides to end it. But instead of dying, she wakes up in a mystical place called the Midnight Library. This library contains an infinite number of books, each representing a different version of her life if she had made different choices.

Guided by her old school librarian, Mrs. Elm, Nora tries out different lives ones where she became a rock star, Olympic swimmer, wife, and mother. Each life reveals new insights about her regrets, happiness, and meaning.

As Nora explores these lives, she realizes that no existence is perfect. Every life has struggle, joy. Eventually, she finds peace and decides to embrace the life she left behind.

Suicide Shop

By Jean Teulé

In a sad and gloomy world, where people feel hopeless and tired of life, the Tuvache family runs a strange little shop. It's called The Suicide Shop, and it sells everything someone might need if they want to end their life poison, ropes, even goodbye letters. Business is good, because no one seems to want to live anymore.

The family is proud of their work. They believe they're helping people who don't want to live. Everyone in the family is serious, quiet, and full of sadness.

Then one day, a new baby is born. His name is Alan. But unlike the rest of the family, Alan is full of joy. He smiles, laughs, and brings sunshine into the dark store.

As Alan grows up, he stays happy and cheerful. He talks to customers, plays music, and makes jokes. Slowly, something strange happens: people stop wanting to die. The family starts to feel confused. They begin to wonder if life might not be so bad after all.

Alan's happiness spreads like magic. He changes the family, the shop, and maybe even the whole world.
