In this report, I will discuss my collaboration experiences. I will elaborate on how difficult it can be to work with people from different educational backgrounds and personalities. Additionally, I will explore the learning opportunities and challenges I faced during three group projects, and describe the emotions these experiences have evoked in me.

In my opinion there are two main factor while collaboration that makes the collaboration a bit challenging . first student have different background knowledge and second students have different personalities.

 students with different educational background , In each project we were in a group including students with different level of experience and knowledge which can make it very hard to adjust every one so we approach high standard outcome for the project but also can give you valuable learning opportunities.

for me It is always very important to show respect to all my group members, regardless of the circumstances. This made it difficult to point out when someone wasn't contributing enough and was slowing others down. There were times when I had to be more restrict towards a free loader, because the whole group's progress was at risk. Fortunately, when I was group leader, the team members put in a lot of effort and performed well, so a harsh move was not needed. However, in another project, I had to alert my group leader that an unpleasant situation in the group might lead to a poor outcome, and I needed to help manage the situation.

Fortunately, after many ups and downs, I was able to achieve good results in every project and handle these kinds of situations.

As I mentioned earlier, it was not only challenges that I encountered, but also many valuable learning opportunities. In some projects, I was not the strongest person in the team, and sometimes it felt like other members were pulling me up, which did not align with my values. I believe that if I'm doing something, I should do it in the best way possible to achieve the best results. This belief pushed me to grow and expand my knowledge and work harder than before .

Comparing who I am now to when I started, I've learned a lot and gained much more experience thanks to some great team members.

Another important factor while collaborating on group projects is not only the work and effort but also the personalities of the people you're working with. Some team members are extremely shy, which can sometimes make it challenging for them to share ideas or ask for help when they need it. On the other hand, there are those who tend to be quite bossy, often dictating what should be done or what should not be done This range of personalities can evoke a mix of emotions: sometimes, I feel a sense of pity and sadness for those who struggle with communication and seem to be left behind, while at other times, it becomes frustrating when someone constantly orders you around constantly.

I've learned how important it is to stand up for myself while also being kind to others. I now try to help the quieter members speak up and make sure that the louder ones don't take over all the conversation. These challenges have shown me that clear and respectful communication is key, and that it's crucial to find ways for everyone to work well together.

For future projects, I plan to set clear guidelines from the start, making sure every team member understands their role and responsibilities. I believe that regular meetings will help us all stay aligned and work toward our common goal. I also think that encouraging everyone to share their ideas openly can minimize the misunderstanding among the team members regarding their role in the group and the tasks that they have to do . By implementing these habits early on, I hope we can create a more supportive and efficient team environment.

In conclusion, working on group projects has taught me important lessons about being flexible, communicating well, and staying patient. I learned that it's important to be confident but also understanding when working with different people, and that clear and respectful communication helps the team work better together.

By facing challenges and learning from both my strengths and mistakes, I've grown not just as a student, but also as a person. These experiences have helped prepare me for future projects, both in school and in life. I'm looking forward to using what I've learned to become a better team player, keep improving how I work with others, and always do my best in everything I take on.

Amir Ranjbar